Decontamination Consultant TGDecon Consultancy

Trevor retired in June 2019 after 37 years in the NHS in various Decontamination roles at 2 Trusts and as such he has gained substantial experience within the field. He also was an Associate Director of Clinical Support Services for 2 years where he gained further knowledge of Pathology, Radiology, Outpatients, Cancer Services and Pharmacy. From 2011 to 2018 (end of term of office) he was the Director of Education for the Institute of Decontamination Sciences (IDSc) and led a team with Health Education England developing an apprenticeship programme for decontamination personnel.

Since retiring he has been appointed by the National School of Healthcare Science as a lead End Point Assessor, provides consultancy to several organisations, is on the education and Conference subcommittee of the IDSc and has just been appointed to the new role of Facilitator by NPAG for the Decontamination group. His main interest is education of the decontamination staff and has been delighted with the standard of the apprentices that have completed their apprenticeship.

He was never ready to retire from the field and is now enjoying the variety of roles that are now available.
